

I will discuss two of the main methods to measure competencies in large-scale surveys among higher education students or graduates: tests and self assessments. I will illustrate these with some recent examples and discuss the pros and cons of each method. I will end with a discussion of the main challenges ahead.